

William Hartnell as the Doctor in the 1965 adventure "The Web Planet".

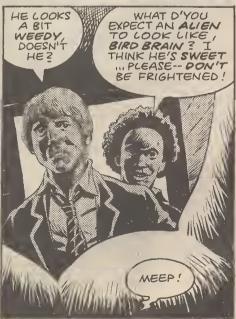

THE MIGHTIEST MENACE

On his journies across the vastness of time and space, the Doctor has faced the most dangerous life forms to inhabit the cosmos. The Daleks, the Cybermen, the Ice Warriors and the Yeti — plus many more, all battled and overcome.

His eventual victory over them is perhaps to be expected as the Doctor is of a higher evolution. Many lesser civilisations have, however, withered under the onslaught of his most deadly enemies.

Though Mankind has had to face invasion from several of his foes, never have there been confrontations between the monsters themselves. Should the most awesome of battles ever come about, which of them would win through at the end to be the all-time mightiest of creatures?

This week and next, Dr Who Weekly weighs up the strengths and weaknessess of the Doctor's most popular opponents.

THE DALEKS

Born from the chaos of war, the Daleks — which sport dangerous weaponary, mechanical arms and telescopic eye pieces — are merely armoured casings for the seething bubbles of monstrous hate housed within.

Created by Davros, the Daleks had their morals eliminated from their brains. The Daleks were programmed with the hate that their master held for all life forms and their first task was to exterminate the other race of people on Skaro, the Thals. Then they exterminated Davros!

Discovering space and time travel, the Daleks have bulldozered their way across the Universe. All life is their enemy. Any beings or races foolish enough to have made pacts with the evil machine creatures reaped their reward for treachery in the form of death at the muzzles of the Dalek blaster ray-guns. The Daleks are programmed to become the sole-surviving/ruling masters of space and time. They can share nothing.

Physical Weakness: Severe sub-zero temperature terminates the Dalek life-support functions.

Dalek Check-List

The Daleks (7 Eps) Dec '63 -Feb '64; The Dalek Invasion of Earth (6 Eps) Nov - Dec '64; The Chase (6 Eps) May - Jun '65; Mission to the Unknown (1 Ep) Oct 9 '65; The Dalek Master Plan (12 Eps) Nov '65 - Jan '66; The Power of the Daleks (6 Eps) Nov - Dec '66; The Evil of the Daleks (7 Eps) May - Jul '67; The Day of the Daleks (4 Eps) Jan '72: Frontier in Space (6 Eps) Feb -Mar '73; Planet of the Daleks (6 Eps) Apr - May '73; Death to the Daleks (4 Eps) Feb - Mar '74; Genesis of the Daleks (6 Eps) Mar - Apr '75; Destiny of the Daleks (4 Eps) Sep '79.

Minor tv appearances in: The Space Museum '65; The War Games '69; The Mind of Evil '71.

Cinema appearances: Dr Who and the Daleks '65; Daleks Invasion Earth – 2150 AD '66.

Stage appearances. The Daleks ('65); Dr Who and the Seven Keys to Doomsday ('74).

Doctor Who Weekly issues: 1, 8, 10, 12, 13, (features), 1, 2, 3, 4, 17, 18, 19, 20 (comic strips)

THE ICE WARRIORS

he Warriors of Mars were dubbed with the title 'Ice Warriors' when a party of the green reptileskinned creatures were discovered frozen in a glacier on Earth!

Once, the warriors were a fearsome militeristic race, intent on conquering and inhabiting the nearby worlds, the Solar System . . . and then beyond! Despite their meticulous war strategies the lumbering, sonic-weapon carrying monsters found that the climate of many worlds made their heavy frames cumbersome and had to rely on technological trickery to make planets capable of supporting them.

Eventually, the ruling aristocrats of the Martians relented and the Warriors became important members of the Galactic Federation. Mankind was relieved. They would rather be on the side of the Warriors than forced to fight against their military might. Roused, they would prove to be a force to be reckoned with once more!

Physical weakness: Ice Warriors become groggy and collapse in warmer climates.

Ice Warriors Check-List

The Ice Warriors (6 Eps) Nov-Dec '67; The Seeds of Death (6 Eps) Jan - Mar '69; The Curse of Peladon (4 Eps) Jan - Feb '72; The Monster of Peladon (6 Eps) Mar - Apr '74.

Minor tv Appearance: The War Games '69.

Doctor Who Weekly issues 3 (feature); 15, 16 (comic strip)

THE SILURIANS

he presently sleeping original inhabitants of the planet Earth, the Silurians, and their sea-born cousins the Sea-Devils wait once more for the day when their subterranean colonies will be revived. Only then will they be able to put to use their advanced scientific knowledge and technology to overthrow the current rule of the human race.

The reptile people were establised races living in vast metal cities on land and beneath the oceans long before Mankind had stepped upon the ladder of evolution. The humans existed merely as hairy pets of the reptile rulers!

When first reawakened after an agelong hibernation, the Silurians were desperate to reclaim the world that humankind had inherited for their own, hardly aware were the humans of their almost alien ancestory. The Silurians showed their scientific might as they attempted to wipe out the humans with germ warfare.

FROM THE DAWN OF TIME

Had the Silurians been allowed to develop from the dawn of time, who can guess at what level they might exist now ... what force might be — should they awaken again with man having laid the foundation of space travel. There we have something the reptiles might readily inherit from us!

Physical weakness: The Silurians find the present climate of Earth too cold.

Silurians/Sea-Devils Check-List Doctor Who and the Silurians (7 Eps) Jan - Mar '70; The Sea-Devils (6 Eps) Feb - Apr '72.

Minor tv Appearance. Frontier in Space '73. Doctor Who Weekly issue: 11 (feature)

Next Week: YETI! SONTARANS! CYBERMEN!

TALES FROM THE TARDIS featuring

HYDE'S DISCOVERY OF HIS DREADFUL POTION
GOT HIM INTO MORE TROUBLE THAN IT WAS WORTH, SO HE RESOLVED TO ALTER
THINGS...

"AS THE YEARS
PASSED I DID MY GOOD WORK AND TRIED TO FORGET
THE OTHER SELF.
BUT I COULD NOT.

THEN I BEGAN TO WORK ON THE IDEA OF
SEPARATING THE TWO SIDES, THE GOOD AND THE EVIL.

CERTAIN RARE DRUGS AND CHEMICALS

I DEVISED

A POTION ...

Adapted from the classic by R. L. Stevenson

THAT NIGHT I WAS AT THE CROSSROADS.
I REALIZED
THIS EDWARD HYDE I HAD RELEASED
WAS PURE
EVIL. THERE WAS NO PLACE FOR HIM AMONG MEN--AND YET...

... BUT

HYDE MUST DIE!

...AND I SHALL DO MY BEST TO SEE IT SUFFER!

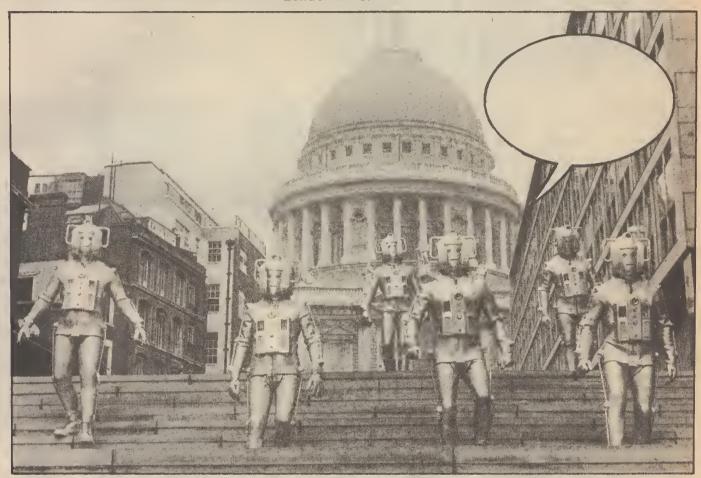

CRAZY CAPTION 19

will know that all you have to do is think of the funniest line you can, to go with the empty speech balloon (25 words or less), and you could win £5! Ten signed colour photos of Tom Baker, will go to the runners-up. Send your entries — on postcards only — postmarked no later than February 25th, to us at:

CRAZY CAPTION NUMBER 19, Marvel Comics, Jadwin House, 205-211 Kentish Town Road, London NW5.

RESULTS OF CRAZY CAPTION NUMBER 13

Andrew Foot, from Glastonbury, wins £5 for his caption printed right:

Signed colour photos of Tom Baker as the Doctor, have gone to the ten up:

Christopher Smith from Blackwood; Thomas Williams from Bangor; Brlan Carbonero from Harlesden; Andrew Bright from Billericay; W. Westwater from Glasgow; Gary Jones from Dyfed; Jeremy Minton from Corbridge; M. Capel from Aldershot; Barry Johnson from Birmingham; Jane Grant from Cardiff,

THE SPACE MUSEUM

This four part adventure was first shown on BBC television on May 1st, 1965.

ne moment the Doctor, lan, Barbara and Vicki are talking, swapping stories of their recent adventures in the Crusades, the next they are standing motionless, like statues, as the TARDIS lands in a desert of white sand strawn with boulders. The air is still. A harsh sun blazes down on the hulls of several spaceships and a collection of low-roofed buildings. There is no sign of life.

Aboard the ship the previously dimmed internal lights come back up again and the four travellers wake to a séries of astonishing events. Even the Doctor is at a loss to explain why the time travellers find themselves dressed in their twentieth century attire instead of their crusading clothes. Then Vicki, taking a glass of water from the food machine, drops it, only to find the shattered pieces magically reassembling themselves and rising back into her hand intact! Turning to the scanner, the Doctor disagrees with lan's idea that they have arrived at a launching pad. To him the tarnished hulks suggest a spaceship graveyard. They decide to explore . . .

The four have walked several yards when lan happens to glance back. Despite having trodden in dust several inches thick, the travellers have left no footprints! Eventually their exploring leads them to a low building with no windows and apparently only one set of solid, metal doors. They are puzzling on this when the doors glide soundlessly open to reveal two stern, white uniformed figures obviously marching out on some errand. Amazingly, the two aliens — Moroks fail to even notice the four strangers. Taking advantage of the open doors, the Doctor leads the group inside to where row after row of glass cabinets and display stands, filled with the flora, fauna and hardware of many alien civilisations, meet their eyes.

All four of them are examining the exhibits, which even includes the casing of a Dalek, when three more figures, more simply dressed with long, flaxen hair — Xerons — walk past them, again with out registering their presence. It is Barbara who notices that apart from their own voices there is a complete absense of sound. It is almost as if they are all ghosts . . .

A final shock awaits them in one of the many rooms off the central corridor. It is the TARDIS, and beside it four glass cases containing the immobile figures of the Doctor, Barbara, Ian and Vicki! The Doctor suddenly realises what has happened. Time, like space, has dimensions and somehow the TARDIS has jumped a time track and brought them, as ghosts, to their own future. There can now be no certainty of escape. They must wait until their 'past' catches up with them and then use this forewarning to avert the circumstances which would lead them to a grim fate as exhibits in the space museum of Xeros...

In the TARDIS control room, the travellers are standing motionless in their crusading clothes. Suddenly they are dressed normally again. Beside the food machine a glass shatters. Outside, two Morok soldiers notice footprints leading from the ship to the museum. Inside, the four cases fade and disappear and beside them the Doctor and his companions are standing frozen. Slowly they recover and look around. Noticing the vanished cases the Doctor sombrely remarks, "We've arrived!"

Meanwhile the museum commander, Lobos, receives news of unexpected alien arrivals with interest. Once the Moroks were a race of galactic conquerors. But their Empire has fallen and the museum on Xeros is an institute almost forgotten by the distant home-world. Anxious to win prestige for adding to the exhibits, Lobos gives orders for the travellers to be captured.

But Lobos is not the only one interested in capturing the Doctor's party. Many years ago, when the Moroks conquered Xeros, the entire adult population was exported as slave labour. The young remained, but only to join the work-force when they came of age. But over the years a weak resistance force has grown up among the Xeron youth and now Sita and Dako are listening eagerly to their leader Tor's account of his discovery of the TARDIS. The ship and its occupants might have much needed weapons. It is imperative that they be contacted before the Moroks can find them. However, since the aliens might be armed, it would be safer for them to abduct one of the party and plead their cause, before openly themselves known to the rest.

Getting out of the museum proves more difficult for the time travellers than getting in. Due to the maze-like structure of the building they are soon lost. It is Ian who finally gets the party back to the entrance hall. The doors are open, but to Vicki's horror the TARDIS is being brought inside by a team of Morok technicians. She turns to the Doctor only to receive a second shock — the old man has disappeared!

Kidnapped by the Xerons, the Doctor quickly finds his wits more than a match for his young captors. He escapes and skilfully manages to evade the youths, but his freedom is short-lived. His next captors are the Moroks!

Above: The Doctor (William Hartnell) being interrogated by Lobos (Richard Shaw). Left: Ian (William Russell) attempts to free the Doctor from Lobos (Richard Shaw) and a Morok technician (Peter Diamond).

Lobos interrogates the Doctor using a thought detector to trick the old man into revealing the number of his companions. Recognising the nature of the device, the Doctor's superior mind foils any further attempt to question him until Lobos finally loses patience and orders the Doctor to be taken to the Preparation room. A terrifying vision of the future is ominously becoming a reality...

Lobos goes to examine the TARDIS and learns of the abortive attempts to gain entry by his soldiers. From behind a display stand, the commander is overheard by lan. Barbara and Vicki, who thus learn of the Doctor's capture. They cautiously edge back into the main building, only to run straight into a guard. A skirmish ensues in which lan is captured — but the girls escape. Barbara takes refuge in a disused store-room...but with a door lock that can only be opened from outside. Vicki runs straight into the hands of the Xeron rebels.

Furious at the way his slackly trained guards have handled the hunt for the time travellers, Lobos is now considering other measures to use against them. Ordering the central block to be evacuated, he instructs his second-in-command to flood the complex with Zaphra gas — a paralysing vapour. Meanwhile, Dako has found Barbara's hideaway and winning her confidence, tells her that Vicki is safe. He is about to lead her to the Zeron headquaters when they notice the spreading gas. They eventually fall victim to is effects!

Meanwhile Vicki has been listening to Tor's problems. The Xeron youths, bordering on adulthood, face a life of slavery and constantly dream of revolution. Their main obstacle is lack of guns — all weapons are kept locked in the armoury which will only open its doors on computer identification. And none of the Xerons know the access codes. Assuring Tor of her technical knowledge, she asks him to take her to the armoury. She successfully reprogrammes the computer and the steel gates glide open. When these guns have been distributed to other rebel groups, the revolt can begin!

Above: A scene from episode two "The Dimensions of Time." The Doctor (William Hartnell) is captured by the deadly Moroks!

Not far away, lan has bested his jailers and has seized a gun of his own, plus a guard as hostage. He is shown to Lobos' office where lan threatens to kill the Morok leader unless he reunites them with the Doctor. Warning lan that it is already too late, Lobos admits him to a room. There, propped up against a marble board, is the Doctor...rigid and ashen-faced with glazed eyes — like a waxwork...

Moving the gun closer to Lobos' face, lan warns him that he had better try to revive the Doctor. Very soon the Doctor is his old self, commenting on the 'embalming' process which freezes the body whilst leaving conciousness untouched — like a living death! But the sound of the Doctor's voice reaches the ears of a Morok officer who, peeping round the door, notices the plight of his commander. Mustering a party of soldiers, the Moroks burst into the Preparation Room and overpower lan. Lobos is pleased. Two down, two to go...

Slowly recovering form the Zaphra gas, Babara and Dako manage to crawl back to the museum exit and straight into the hands of the waiting Moroks!

Vicki and Sita try to rescue them but they fail and Sita is killed. Leaving Dako insensible, Vicki and Barbara are taken to join their friends in the Preparation Room. As the technicians ready the freezing equipment, the four realise that events are moving ever closer to the future they have seen!

Yet help is at hand in the form of Tor and his people. Years of idleness have weakened the Morok fighting force and they are no match for the enthusiam of the Xerons. Tor leads the attack on the museum itself while a group raid the Preparation Room. In the exchange of gun-fire Lobos is shot with their leader dead, the remaining guards lay down their arms. The planet Xeros belongs once more to the Xerons and Tor is able to begin implementing his promise to Vicki the demolition of the Space Museum. For if the museum ceases to exist then at no future date could the travellers ever end up as exhibits within the building. The vision of the future has been changed.

A while later, the four are standing outside the TARDIS ready to leave. The Doctor is showing lan the condenser unit form the console which led to their time track jump, when he sees an item of equipment being carried out of the museum — a Time Visualiser — a kind of time television. Tor is happy to give the device to the Doctor as a parting gift, and he and Dako watch in awe as the outlines of the police box shimmer and fade.

But the Xerons are not the only ones observing the departure of the TARDIS. On the distant world of Skaro, colder eyes are watching... With the merest hint of triumph sounding in its voice, the Black Dalek acknowledges his sub-ordinates report. With their own time ship standing ready, the hunt for the Doctor and his companions can begin...

Comment

The appearance of the Daleks at the climax of this story rounded off a very well written and nicely structured Dr Who story. To date this has been the only story Glyn Jones has written for Dr Who, though his name did crop up again in the series when, in the 1975 story, "The Sontaran Experiment", he played one of the Galsec astronauts.

Readers may be interested to note that, due to the virtual year-round production of Dr Who during the sixties, regular actors and actresses would often not appear in an episode in order to give themselves a week's holiday. Such an instance occurs in "The Space Museum" with William Hartnell absent from episode three, The Search".

However, all four regulars appear throughout the next story which features, not only a literal galaxy of locations, but also the epic battle between the Daleks and their deep space robotic rivals, the Mechanoids.

THE SPACE MUSEUM Credits

The Doctor (William Hartnell); Ian Chesterton (William Russell); Barbara Wright (Jacqueline Hill); Vicki (Maureen O'Brien); Lobos (Richard Shaw); Tor (Jeremy Bulloch); Sita (Peter Sanders); Dako (Peter Craze). Written by Glyn Jones; Directed by Mervyn Pinfield; Produced by Verity Lambert.

Next Week: PART TWO

Once more, we have a huge batch of your letters - and photos - to print, so lets get straight into them . . .

Dear Doctor,

I have been a devoted Dr Who fan for as long as I can remember, and have collected all the books.

Each week now, I record the programme on cassette and I have now quite a collection! I think that "Creature from the Pit" and "The Nightmare of Eden" were two of the best stories I have seen for a long time.

It is interesting to note that Eileen Way, who played Adrasta's sidekick also played the part of the Old Mother in ture, "An Unearthly Child." Nottingham.

John Drennan, Farnham.

Reader Justin Kemp from Northampton.

Dear Dr Who Weekly,

You have a success on your hands with Dr Who Weekly, a visible bona fide success! I enjoy it all! All the tv programme's points of merit shine through!

You've definitely captured the Doctor's inimitable sense of humour! In the face of joke, completely ruining the Essex.

villain's power. haughtv You've also picked out the Doctor's amazing ingenuity. He has no real physical strength but can easily out manouvre his enemies using his supreme intelligence. He is so brilliant that, no matter the threat, he can make any situation work for him. I'd pity any monster facing the Doctor's quick wit and crashing humour!

Neal Allen.

the very first Dr Who adven- Reader Lesley Marriot from

Dear Dr Who Weekly,

I am writing to express my gratitude to all concerned in the production of Dr Who Weekly.

"The Story of Doctor Who" promises to be truly excellent and probably the best part of the whole magazine, with the "Photo-File" a close second.

Can such excellence be maintained in a weekly publication?

J.C. Bain, Hatfield.

death he laughs and cracks a Reader Martin Stacey from Reader Leigh Farringdon from Chertsey.

Dear Dr Who Weekly,

collection!

Nicola Hepworth, Bingley.

Reader David Dunn from Luton

Dear Doctor.

Congratulations on excellent mag. I was born eighteen days before the first episode of the first series of Dr Who so I have practically grown up on the programme. But I was always annoyed at the lack of comic strips and the available ones were always lacking in good story ideas and art (one exception was the strip in a comic under the name of Countdown which was out around 1975, and ran for about 100 editions).

But this has ended now Dr Who Weekly is around. The art work is fantastic, and more in a British style which I think suits Dr Who better, but I still think the Americans will like it when it is printed for them.

Judging by the letters in number 7, the Cybermen are quite popular. I think these semi-Human creatures are far more interesting than the Daleks, and have a more believable history. They send shivers down my spine on tv and on paper. Anyway, the climax and end to "Throwback" was superb. It had a message, and the final two I have been watching Dr frames were epic (that sun-Who for ten years now and rise/sunset) and the Kroton's what a way to celebrate a mouth makes me think that decade of great adventures! A he has found the Human part new Dr Who weekly comic. I of himself/herself, and the intend to get the comic every small circle under the eye week, it will be yet another looks strangely like a tear item to add to my Dr Who drop. Touching! How about a follow-up either about Kroton or other "malfunctioning" Cybermen. always thought that the Cybermen have more chance of regaining emotions than the Daleks!

Eric Pavlyak, Enfield.

Reader Michael Fower rom Lancashire.

Who Cares! Doctor Who Weekly, Marvel Comics, Jadwin House, 205-211 Kentish Town Road, London NW5.

Entry Number Nineteen:~ KATY MANNING

BORN: 1951 ROLE: Jo Grant YEARS: 1971 to 1973

MAJOR TV APPEARANCES: Softly Softly; Man

at the Top; Target; Serendipity.

MAJOR STAGE APPEARANCE: Why Not Stay for Breakfast (opposite Derek Nimmo).

SPECIAL MENTION: Katy Manning was born in Guildford, Surrey, the daughter of the late sports columnist J.L. Manning. She served her acting apprenticeship at the Webber Douglas Drama School for a year before joining a Wolverhampton repertory company.

Katy has always been concious of her height - she is little over five foot — and so quickly moved on from stage work to television where size can be easily disguised. Here she made several commercials for ITV before her first real television work in an episode of Softly Softly. A spell with ITV followed before she attended the auditions to find a new assistant for Jon Pertwee's Doctor in July 1970.

Although she got the part of Jo Grant, a role which would call for a lot of stunt work, Katy admitted later that she kept very quiet about her acute short-sightedness during the screen tests. She paid for it later. During her very first day on location for "Terror of the Autons", she tripped over a boulder in a quarry and sprained her ankle!

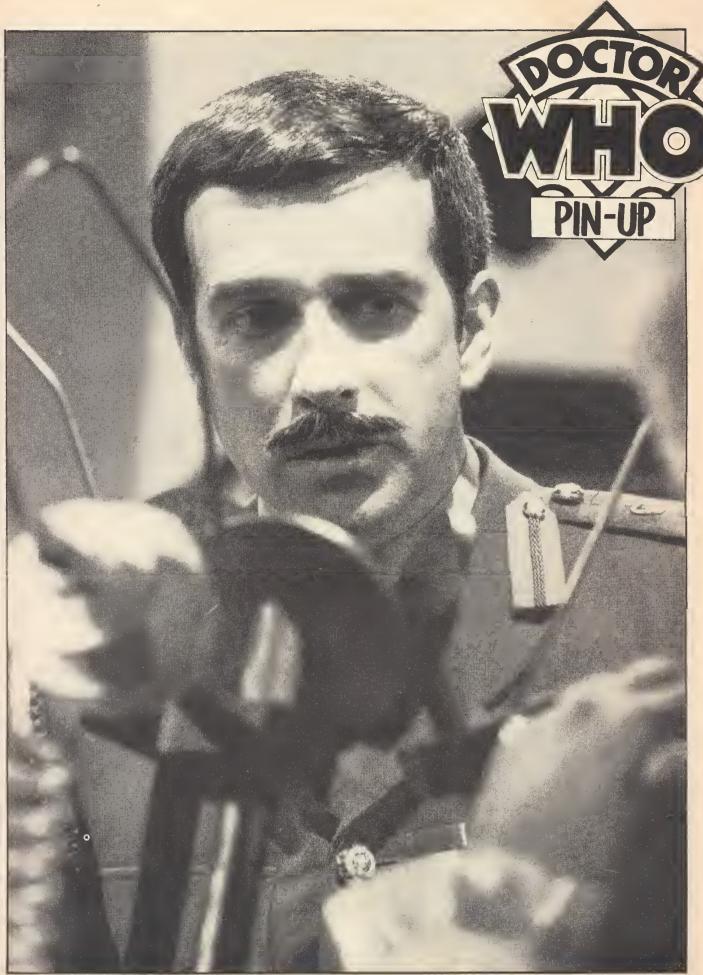

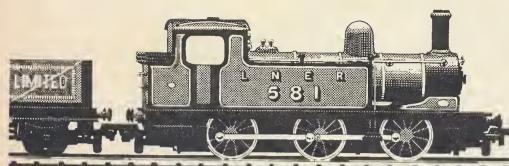

Nicholas Courtney as Brigadier Lethbridge Stewart in the 1970 adventure "Terror of the Autons".

THRILLS,

Mainline Railways give you more of what you want. More detail. More excitement. Locomotives and rolling stock are based on authentic British Railways blueprints. Lots of exciting sets to choose from.

Big Loader is the battery powered construction set that does it all. Loads. fills, scoops, hauls, dumps and reverses. You can change its route as often as you like.

BIG LOADER

All at your Palitoy

shop now.